

Málaga is the major coastal city of Andalucía and is a genuine and typical Andalus city with a gritty individualism and historic charm which is gradually being appreciated by tourists who, in the past, headed straight for the Costa resorts with barely a backwards glance. Admittedly, initial impressions can be discouraging as, like most Spanish cities, the shell is drab and industrial. But the kernel, the historic city centre, is fascinating, with its majestic, if peculiar, unfinished Gothic Cathedral, surrounded by sun-baked ochre buildings, narrow pedestrian streets and atmospheric bars. Autumn is probably one of the best moments to visit the city

Málaga airport is of course one of the major airports in Spain due to the number of tourist arrivals on charter flights from Northern Europe using Málaga airport as a gateway to the Costa del Sol. The airport is 8 kilometres west of the city of Málaga and is the main flight path for million people arriving on the Costa del Sol each year. With flight connections to more than 60 worldwide destinations, including most of the low cost companies.
